Accounting for Ourselves: Breaking the Impasse Around Assault and Abuse in Anarchist Scenes

<http://www.crimethinc.com/blog/2013/04/17/accounting-for-ourselves/>

Sexual assault and abuse continue to plague anarchist circles and spaces. In response, we’ve developed processes to hold each other accountable outside of the state. But why can’t we seem to get them right? Accounting for Ourselves, examines the context in which these community accountability models emerged, analyzes the pitfalls we’ve encountered in trying to apply them, and proposes new directions for our resistance

Challenging Men, Changing Communities: Reflections on Male Supremacy and Transformative Justice

<http://challengingmalesupremacy.files.wordpress.com/2011/03/challenging-men-changing-communities1.pdf>

Details the collective experience of forming CMS, organizing and facilitating a nine-month “Study-into-Action” group, and holding a public event (as well as some of the political analysis that brought us to this project). We bookend the essay with a detailed, first-person account of one of our experiences supporting an accountability process.

Gender Oppression-Abuse-Violence: Community Accountability in People of Color Progressive Movements

<http://www.transformativejustice.eu/wp-content/uploads/2010/11/community-accountability-in-POC-progressive-mvmt.pdf>

A report drafted in 2005 to develop community accountability politics, principles, processes, and practices which can extend beyond gender to address other forms of oppression.

It's Down to This: Reflections, Stories, Experiences, Critiques, and Ideas on Community and Collective Response to Sexual Violence, Abuse, and Accountability

<http://www.akpress.org/itsdowntothis.html>

This zine collects a multitude of stories, reflections and articles—from advice on finding a therapist, written by a perpetrator who is in an accountability process, to articles describing what different accountability groups look like, to raw stories of the failure of radical communities to step up and offer support to survivors.

Building Accountable Communities

Accountability is a familiar buzz-word in contemporary social movements, but what does it mean? How do we work toward it? In this series of four short videos, anti-violence activists Kiyomi Fujikawa and Shannon Perez-Darby ask and explore: What does it look like to be accountable to survivors without exiling or disposing those who do harm?

Conversation created by Kiyomi Fujikawa and Shannon Perez-Darby. Filmed by Christina Antonakos-Wallace. Videos edited by Dean Spade and Hope Dector. Part of a series of workshops and videos on community accountability and transformative justice; conceived by Mariame Kaba, Just Practice Collaborative, and Project NIA.
